

MEXICAN OIL FIELD STORY TOLD SENATE

Embassy of Mexican Petroleum Company Informs Committee Progression Was Paid For.

TELL OF CARRANZA PAYMENT

Dr. Tupper Active in Behalf of President of Mexico Receives Draft From Treasurer General.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—The business of the Mexican oil fields, together with the vicissitudes of oil prospectors resulting from bandit attacks and obnoxious decrees and laws of the Carranza government, was described today to the senate by the committee on foreign relations subcommittee investigating the Mexican situation by Dr. Henry Allen Tupper, now pastor of the First Baptist church of Washington, but formerly active in obtaining recognition for the Carranza government by the United States. Had received a draft for $13,000 from the treasurer-general of Mexico. It was indicated that the committee would call Doctor Tupper to explain for what the draft was payment.

Paid for Protection.
In the course of his description of the development of the Mexican oil fields, largely by American capital, Dr. Tupper admitted his company had paid Manuel Palacios, the rebel leader for protection, but declared that the payment was made on the basis of $1000 a month and also that the course was in line with suggestions of John Lind and J. R. Sullivan, personal representatives of President Wilson in Mexico.

To the charge of Finance Minister Cabrera of the Mexican cabinet that his company was fostering rebellion by furnishing arms and ammunition to Palacios, Dr. Tupper submitted a memorandum addressed to the American state department, declaring that Lind and Sullivan had advised payment of taxes to which ever faction happened to be in control, but denied that munitions were ever furnished Palacios.

Full Gets Information.
Dr. Tupper had completed his testimony when Chairman Fall asked him if he ever had known any of those who had been active in work in behalf of Carranza receiving any remuneration. His answer was the presentation of a draft when had been made out by the Huasteca Petroleum company in favor of the treasurer-general of Mexico and by him made payable to the order of Doctor Tupper for "value received."

After payment the check found its way back to the Huasteca company.

Mr. Doheney did not pretend to know the nature of the indicated "value" of Doctor Tupper's work for Carranza and his government, but intimated it was done as an agent of the "international peace forum."

Entitled to Bonus.
S. A. T. C. are entitled to the $50 bonus awarded discharged service men. Several have asked information of the local Red Cross regarding the matter and the organization has assigned a number to receive their bonuses.

Andrew and Imogene

By ROBERT L. KERRISON.

It was 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Andrew had let the back of the Morris chair down to its last notch and lay back in it with an open book in his lap. The cigar between his fingers had gone out and he sported a man's fashion.

Imogene was curled up kitten fashion on a couch, out-napping. "Whirrrrrrrrr" rang the telephone bell. Both started suddenly. Imogene's first movement was to rearrange her skirts. Andrew muttered a short, sudden word and jumped to the telephone.

"No, this is not the children's hospital. You've got your thumb on the wrong button!" He hung up the receiver and turned to Imogene.

"I was almost asleep."

"If that's what you mean by almost," she replied, "I am glad you were not almost dead, for if you had been I would be wearing black tomorrow. Gracious, but I was having a sweet dream! I love dreaming, don't you?"

"Nope. I can't say that I care enough about it to ever become expert with the pen hook," replied Andrew. "What were you dreaming?"

"I dreamed that Mrs. Gish, my dressmaker, was on her death-bed."

Andrew broke in on her with: "My dear, I cannot imagine a more pleasant dream than that! I wish I had dreamed it. I could enjoy myself at that woman's death-bed."

"But that was not the pleasant part of it, for I like Mrs. Gish. But I thought she told me as she was passing out of the world, that she was willing to let her entire place and that as soon as the funeral was over I could go back and take possession, and I did, and just when the telephone opened up I was back in the shop and all the women were making dresses for me. I was standing in front of a piece of glass trying on dresses after dress, and they were the most gorgeous things you ever saw!"

"Honey," said Andrew, solemnly, "you have been granted what comes to few people in this world. The great veil which divides this world and eternity has been for the moment drawn aside and you have entered paradise. The veil has been lifted and you have been in heaven—what is the feminine of heaven?"

Imogene continued: "You have entered this heaven and you should sit in awe at the blessing which has been granted you."

"I also dreamed, but not as you dreamed. I had gone down to the College Inn and seated myself at a table, and there were no waiters there. I sat for a moment waiting for a waiter, and the swing door, which separates the dining-room from the kitchen opened and in came a gorgeous, cross covered with orange, yellow dots. With her from behind, she pushed a tea cart. I started to run, but two pairs of frog legs scolded me from behind, and I was pinned to the table by having one claw of a manatodon crab pinched around my neck and the other pinched around the leg of the table."

"On came the cow and the cat, and when I drew closer I saw a big lobster on top waving those two long red whippers at me and singing: 'Ain't you glad we found you?' When he was close enough he stuck one claw in my mouth and then, opening the claw, he dropped my mouth open and just then the top of the cart opened and out of it flew a whole flock of redbirds. They were picked off except their wings, and they circled the room for a moment and then the whole flock began to fly into my mouth like a flock of chimney swallows going down the top of a chimney at sunset. Then the phone rang, and I woke up."

"Andrew," inquired Imogene, with a smile, "what is the masculine of heaven?"

"I don't know and I don't care a cuss!" said Andrew.

DRIVE FOR ARMORY HERE WILL START

Plans for Campaign Inaugurate Chamber of Commerce to Discuss Today; Fred Shaw to Report

Frank Bryant, chairman of the chamber of commerce committee appointed some time ago for handling a campaign through which it is proposed to raise funds for the construction here of an armory for use by the four local units of Oklahoma national guards, is out of the city and will not return until Monday and as a result plans of the committee for launching the drive next week are immature.

Other members of the committee are Grant R. McCallough, E. M. McFarlin and W. L. Lewis. The matter will probably be taken up at the meeting today of directors of the chamber.

Fred Shaw is also to present the proposition for the city to install an asphalt plant of its own. Shaw stated yesterday that he has been unable to get the desired information from the city because of the name of work piled up on the city engineer, but the directors will discuss the proposal.
